Enjoy!A common method for reinforcing thermoplastic containers involves applying a metallized film to the surface of the thermoplastic. The metallized film is typically applied in a pattern such as a grid. In the case of beverage bottles, for example, the metallized film is applied to the outside of the bottle to provide a barrier that prevents foreign objects from entering the bottle. Plastics are frequently extruded into containers in sheet form. Sheets may be extruded in discrete lengths, which are thereafter cut into the lengths that are needed for a particular application. This produces a discontinuous surface on the container, i.e., the sheet has a rough surface due to the cut. When plastic is extruded into a container, it is often extruded through a shaping die which transforms the sheet of plastic into a tubular parison. The tubular parison is supported over a forming mandrel which is in engagement with a mandrel segment of the die. The shaping die comprises an annular forming neck which surrounds the mandrel segment. When a mandrel segment is used, a vacuum is applied to the interior of the parison. As the parison is being extruded, it is brought into engagement with the mandrel, and the vacuum is released. The vacuum tends to pull the sheet of plastic material into the forming neck to form a flange on the tubular parison. The flange is maintained in engagement with the mandrel by a support means. In the case of a shaping die with a mandrel segment, it is desirable to apply a vacuum to the tubular parison to increase its stiffness and to better maintain the parison in engagement with the mandrel segment. Also,

I have a controller that redirects URLs with spaces to a URL without them. For example: The redirect code in my controller looks like this: @RequestMapping("/students/{studId}/") public ModelAndView get(@PathVariable("studId") String studId, ModelAndView modelAndView, HttpServletRequest request) { ModelAndView modelAndView = new ModelAndView("redirect:admin"); modelAndView.addObject("studId", getStudentById(studId)); modelAndView.addObject("role", "student"); modelAndView.addObject("url", "admin.home"); return modelAndView; } private Student getStudentById(String studId) { Student student = new Student(); student.setd(studId); return student; } So the code redirects URLs like: /students/student/admin.home to /admin.home when the request has the student id as a parameter. The problem is that I'm trying to redirect URLs like: /students/student/admin.home to /admin.home when the request has the studId as a parameter, but I'm getting an error: Request method 'GET' not supported It seems that the URL does not accept spaces. But how can I redirect spaces to no-spaces? A: You need to convert studId to a valid URL by removing the whitespaces. So I suggest you adding studId.replaceAll(" ", "") as a method in your getStudentById() method to remove the whitespaces.
