The 0-day patches are developed in a very transparent way – all of the code changes are released with the new version. At that point, a professional with several years' experience in reverse engineering an application has a couple of hours to analyze and even reverse engineer it, and the resulting data is then uploaded to the distribution. The demand for experts to tackle this situation became an urgent need so Adobe In-House Security and Rapid Threat Response (RTX) Program's team decided to fulfill that need by offering up these 0-day patches. There are two options that can be selected for this group of patches. You can either choose the patches that are installed in your default Adobe AIR runtime, or you can download and install those patches directly from Adobe's web site. Easiest option to protect your software The easiest option is to install the patches directly from Adobe's site, if you want to protect your Adobe AIR software. The patch is delivered via a ZIP file. You can do this via a web browser, or you can create a link to download and install the patches directly from within your software. If you do the latter option, you can easily apply the patch and leave your software running. You just need to click the link. You can then leave your software running for a while, and then just close it. Otherwise, if you select the second option you have to unzip the patch and then execute it. The application does all the necessary chores. It detects whether you have already installed Adobe AIR software from Adobe's website, and if you select that option you get the Flash Player to Adobe AIR update. The Flash Player to Adobe AIR patch is the one that can update Flash Player runtime installed on your system with the new version of Adobe AIR. This is an automated process that runs through the Adobe server at Adobe.com, so there is no need to contact customer service if you select this option. You can also apply all patches to flashplayer.exe directly Alternatively, you can install the patch for Flash Player runtime that is installed on your system through this: Go to Adobe AIR website and download Adobe AIR patch. You must be logged into your Adobe account. Open the downloaded patch (AFS-P-088919-1-0.exe) to apply the patch. Alternatively, you can download and install the patches for Flash Player runtime a69d392a70

Color Stability of Zinc Oxide Thin Films Coated on Polyurethane Foam. Polyurethane foam (PUF) can be used as a substrate for transparent, flexible, and inexpensive solar cells. In this work, the performance of ZnO coated PUF as a solar cell substrate was measured for up to 90 days. The cell performance after 90 days was improved, compared to the value measured at the end of the preceding 30 days. The degradation rate of the performance after 90 days was found to be 2.21×10^{-4} cm/s. UV-vis transmittance values were measured and did not change significantly. The cell parameters were also estimated from the dark current-voltage characteristics at a specific light intensity of 500 W/m².
