The RSSOwl app is the successor of RSS Viewer, featuring a large collection of RSS feeds from all around the web and a user-friendly interface. The RSSOwl app uses a simple icon to let you read feeds instantly. Feeds are organized into folders, which are easy to find because they contain the title, date, author, and a category that's chosen when you first open RSSOwl. RSSOwl can also be used to interact with different social networks, and you can share feeds on social networking sites like Facebook, Twitter, and LinkedIn. RSSOwl also lets you import a large number of feeds from a file or website, and its real-time search feature includes unlimited filters (not just for titles, but for author, tags and categories) that narrow down results to only the feeds that meet your search criteria. RSSOwl provides a number of import options, including the ability to specify the file name when you want to use an existing RSS feed as a template, or to choose a folder to start your own feeds from. RSSOwl provides options for sorting feeds alphabetically, by source, or on the basis of your personal recommendations. You can organize feeds into folders, but RSSOwl also lets you create shortcuts to individual feeds for easy access. RSSOwl has a wizard-based mechanism for adding feeds from recommended lists, from a file, or from one or more websites. Finally, RSSOwl lets you create special labels for your feeds, so you can quickly find the posts you care about. You can also create news filters, so you can see all the posts in a feed that have a specific tag, for example. RSSOwl makes it possible to share posts from feeds you care about, and you can also send a message to RSSOwl itself to share posts with others. Preliminary note: the RSSOwl app is in early development (currently in alpha), and it does not include all the features of the full version. Although some of those might be in the pipeline, it is not possible to see the features in previews. The app might also be updated frequently, until the full release.
