You may have heard about the latest craze called “USB drives”. They are very useful and handy devices that allow you to carry your important files on your hand anywhere. Most of the time people buy them thinking that they are safer than other ways of storing data (such as a hard drive) – but unfortunately that’s not the case. You may have also heard about “encrypted USB drives”. They are nice, because they allow you to use a higher level of security when it comes to storing your data. Usually data is encrypted on a PC or laptop, but you cannot take it with you if your computer is stolen. However, if you have a USB drive, you can keep your files on the device, and when you’re ready, you can decrypt it with the same USB stick, which will then bring your data back to life. The thing is, these USB sticks do not store data like a hard drive. They are not independent devices. They have to be connected to your computer – to the USB port on your computer, or through a special USB hub. Why Buy Kruptos 2 Go USB Vault from BitsDujour.COM?
