What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2021 (Version 22.1.0)?

Q: RedisList - Remove item from it using spring data What is the best way to remove a value from a list? I'm using RedisList and Spring Data. I know that this will work: RedisList myList = new RedisList(myDbClient, MyClass.class); MyClass myValue = myList.remove(0); But I found that there is another way to do it. I searched about it and found that I can use the removeIndex() method. However, I'm not sure how exactly is it using. It works in this way: myList.removeIndex(0); I'm doing this because I can remove the first element using the first method. I was also thinking in doing this: MyClass myValue = myList.get(0); myList.remove(myValue); Does it matter if I'm doing this way or another? A: You're mixing Redis and Spring Data. This is a bad idea. Both technologies are used to store and retrieve data: Redis, for the data Spring Data JPA to persist in/from Redis Spring Data Redis to retrieve the data from Redis If you want to retrieve the first object from Redis, you could simply use a RedisTemplate. Then, you don't have to implement all these Spring Data artifacts. Here's an example: RedisTemplate template = new RedisTemplate(); template.opsForValue().set(REDIS_KEY, OBJECT_KEY); String firstObject = template.get(REDIS_KEY); A: Using the RedisList.removeIndex(String key) method in conjunction with an indexOf method on the RedisList should be equivalent to using getItem(int i) and remove(Object o) methods, which is far more efficient than getting the first item and using remove(Object o). The spring-data-redis developers decided against that approach because the former approach is thread-safe and the latter isn't (the thread-safety of a List is lost when the contents are replaced). A: If you are using spring-data-redis to store and retrieve item, then it has its own custom API to do this, hence using removeIndex
