Biotinylated glycoconjugates containing a primary amine in the O position of the sugar moiety have been used as ligands to identify new heparin-binding molecules with potential uses as therapeutics. Here we report the synthesis and in vitro binding studies of three new glycoconjugates containing simple mannose and reducing sugars, mannalactone, lactulose, and allose, to assess their potential utility as ligands for heparin binding. The binding of all three ligands to heparin was time-dependent. Pretreatment of the ligands with heparinase I and II abolished the heparin binding of all three ligands. The heparin displacement experiment indicated that the sugar moieties of the ligands were more important for heparin binding than the primary amine function of the sugar. In addition, the ligand was found to be bound to heparin in a salt-dependent manner. AUTHOR INFORMATION: JK Rowling - The world's most famous author of J.K.
