Hospitalization for acute viral lower respiratory tract infections among children in Madrid, Spain: difference between 1999-2004 and 2005-2010. To describe hospitalization for acute viral lower respiratory tract infections (LRTI) and to compare such events occurring in the previous 5 years with those observed in the last 10 years (2005-2010) in Madrid, Spain. The case-crossover design was used. Cases were defined as children admitted at a general hospital for acute viral LRTI. Four control periods were selected, one for each three week period between 01/01/2005 and 31/12/2004, a control period 3 weeks after the start of the previous year was selected for the 5-year period (01/01/2000 to 31/12/2004), and one for the last 10 years (01/01/2005 to 31/12/2009). For both winter months (December-February) and summer months (May-August), the proportion of admissions due to colds

Hey guys, this is my second upload today and I'm quite excited about it. The Gemstone Codex is a very old book (not as old as the Sanguine Legacy or I, for that matter) but is still a great resource for information on magic. From what I could gather from a quick Google search, it seems to be a 1st Edition sourcebook for the SAGA system. To give you guys some perspective, this was written in 1994 (OoO; I was a wee little child) and though it's written for the SAGA system, the magic rules are universal. (I'm looking to publish a new 2E sourcebook, but I don't want to release it at SAGA's launch date. I would prefer a more classic feel to it, and I would like to spend some more time looking into the various SAGA variant rules and different game systems.) -- Edit: Not very much stuff actually, but I found a few cool resources to add to the download. Hey guys, I'm back to do some 3E stuff. Hopefully I won't be too MIA for a while, but there are a few things that have come up. I've updated the post for The Witch Hunter's Handbook to be exact to what is in the book, but while I'm here I want to give a quick refresher on the 3E Faiths. (It's in there for a reason, I might as well explain it now...) The Faiths are a set of Magic systems that were first introduced in the 3E rules. They use an invocation points system to determine your spells rather than spells known, which is very different from the 2E system. I found these to be very playable, as they work very similar to the 2E system, but with a much different cast mechanic. So, for the 3E faith system, the conversion to 2E would be as follows: 3E Faith: -Constant -Per Casting -For the caster, Cost / Casting -For a character using The Knowledge feat, Cost / Casting + 2 3E Power: -Per Casting -For the caster, Cost / Casting -For a character using The Knowledge feat, Cost / Casting + 2 2E Power: -Per Casting -For the caster, Cost / Casting -For a character using The Knowledge feat, Cost / that what I did. I designed the game with the graphics, ause I'm really not a 3d artist, I just really enjoy making for the game design and coding. Maybe I'll just make it
