(film) Choice of the Vampire is a 1946 feature film version of the 1940 radio series of the same name, co-produced by Warner Brothers with radio producer Orson Welles and was Welles's last film for the studio. Directed by Fritz Lang, the picture stars Christopher Lee as Dr. Michael Garth and Anne Jeffreys as Mina Murray. Welles briefly appears on-screen in the closing sequence where he mourns the film as "a good-bye to all the bullshit in this world", interspersed with graffiti and puns. It also features a pre-war traffic jam and scenes in the Golden Gate Bridge. Orson Welles's displeasure with the final film cost his studio the services of his director, Fritz Lang. One of his final efforts for Warner Brothers, the film is a neo-pagan morality play based loosely on the life of a travelling witch (Jeffreys) who hires a masked and caped vampire (Lee) to bring her two daughters back from the dead. The film remains one of the few to feature a pre-war traffic jam that sets the stage for a meditation on non-violent revolution. Welles's "last word" for Warner Brothers was the 1952 role of Fagin in the gangster film The Feller Who Looks at the Moon. Plot The first-person narration of the opening titles tells us that "not long before that May morning I died, I travelled to the East." The story then flashes to Berlin in 1922. Frank Halloran's "new and beautiful wife Mina, her baby girl, Mia, and a little boy, Laddie, are killed in an automobile accident. When Frank learns of his wife's fate, he is devastated, tears up a palm, and pays for some flowers from a florist. The only other witness to the crash is an older woman taken to the police station to identify her dead baby. In his grief, Frank is compelled to find and kill all three of the baby's parents. At the motel, he shoots the other woman, the father, and Mia's innocent friend. He returns home but cannot decide whether to await the arrival of the police or commit suicide. He does both. The girl, Gertrude, tells the cop (on his radio) that her client, Mina, is dead, but not of this accident. The narrator returns us to the present, set in the "bustling European city" of Vienna, where
