MobileGeeks.com A: I suspect your home folder is named Windows. According to the video it is actually named Windows. That's why you get the error. Try renaming the folder and move it again.
Assuming you have the latest version of Windows, you can simply click the question mark in Explorer in the bottom right and rename it. Conventional cable networks (e.g., broadcast cable networks) receive a single network feed from a satellite dish or from an over-the-air broadcast tower. The network feed includes a plurality of channels that are selectable by channel selection devices, and a viewer may access a desired channel by choosing the appropriate channel selection device. The number of available channels varies greatly from network to network, and can be as few as a few dozen, to as many as several hundred, or even more than a thousand. Because the number of channels available to the viewer is limited, a viewer may be forced to tune to an undesirable channel. In addition, a viewer that is watching a particular channel and is interested in a sports event will miss a portion of the game when tuned to a non-sports channel. Consequently, a viewer can become frustrated and lose interest in the particular channel that was previously viewed, or might start watching another channel. To this end, conventional cable networks permit a viewer to access additional channels by subscribing to pay-per-view services that permit cable subscribers to pay a monthly fee in order to access numerous channels. In
