MEGHC2 microRNA mutation in Williams syndrome. Williams syndrome is a rare neurodevelopmental disorder in which affected individuals exhibit a recognizable constellation of congenital malformations and neurocognitive characteristics. As a result of a recent genome-wide association study (GWAS), a region of chromosome 7q36.1, containing >46 independently associated polymorphic markers, was identified in which missense mutations in the myc-associated zinc finger protein gene, MEG3, account for most of the identified coding variants. We employed next generation sequencing (NGS) techniques to identify the mutation causing the most commonly observed missense mutation in Williams syndrome. Through NGS of this region in 20 patients with a clinical diagnosis of Williams syndrome, we identified an A-to-C substitution in the MEGHC2 microRNA resulting in a threonine to proline substitution at amino acid 10 of MEGHC2. We then tested the possibility that this microRNA mutation is a risk factor for another phenotypically similar neurodevelopmental disorder, Angelman syndrome, by screening parents of Angelman syndrome probands for the microRNA mutation. In 5 of the 13 tested cases, the mother carried the microRNA mutation, and all 5 had an Angelman syndrome diagnosis. We provide direct evidence that this microRNA mutation, which is predicted to disrupt microRNA-mediated inhibition of the MEGHC2 protein, is a risk factor for the Angelman syndrome phenotype.

Q: Sharepoint administrator task to give permission to a user
Is there any SharePoint admin task in which I can get permission to change one web application?
A: First you have to find the Central Administration site in which you are in, First type the URL of your Central Administration in the browser (where 4321 is the port number for Microsoft SharePoint Foundation) There you need to find your application which has role access to modify. Go to Application Management page: Navigate to the Application in which you want to modify permissions. Open the Role permission assigned to the selected Application. You can see the list of roles with permission on the web page
