parts/ xiro-xplorer-ddr-x-plorer Bandai Namco has released an updated version of its experimental Xbox 360 controller called the X-Plorer Extreme 2. While the original X-Plorer earned a bit of a following with gamers after Bandai Namco revealed the design at this year's Consumer Electronics Show, the company had to make quite a few changes to bring the device to market. The original X-Plorer was a large, chunk-shaped controller that had a few potential issues. And while the new X-Plorer appears to be a slightly smaller and sleeker version of the original design, it still has a few quirks. First, while the new controller looks slick, Bandai Namco still isn't offering any official Xbox 360 cable in the retail channel. The new X-Plorer can hook up to the console through a proprietary cable that has an end that plugs into a second proprietary port on the console. This newer version of the X-Plorer runs at 5.8V, so when plugged into the console, you'll see a warning message to that effect. The new X-Plorer features a thumbstick that moves freely through any of its 360 degrees, a D-pad that goes all the way around, and two trigger buttons that are each double the size of the originals (each offering 6-way up-and-down movement). The new design also features a very unique dual-function shape, which has two left and right buttons that go together to form a trigger and an analog nub-looking touch pad. And as previously shown, the new X-Plorer has a built-in drumset that supports different mics, triggers, and pads to support guitar players looking for a drumset-like experience.The new X-Plorer is actually the third version of the controller and comes ahead of the original, which was rumored to be an early prototype that never made it to market. The new X-Plorer will be available for $119.99 on April 3 in North America, while it's available on March 2 for €99.99 in Europe. And if you can't wait, you can try the X-Plorer by yourself in the video below. The Wii U GamePad is seen held in Mario Kart 8. All this occurs in the game on the GamePad without the use of the TV. You cannot play on the GamePad
