Ask HN: Is there an open source project that uses dropbox like file sync? - nance I've recently been using Dropbox and I really like it. As a programmer, I've taken to storing my source code inside dropbox and having version control using any free SVN server (I like tortoise). This has actually saved me hours of time just going through folders on a machine. Does anyone know of any projects that do the same? I would love to use a similar solution with my "core" business files as well. ===== mjs00 There are a lot of ways to do this. You could use an ftp server (vsftpd) to write to the directories on the server in a way that it mirrors the dropbox configuration for the specified directories. I'm not sure it would get you quite as transparent as dropbox, but it would still be nice. There are also projects that do this kind of thing. I think the git-dropbox plugin () works with git to do this. I found that to be extremely transparent, but I imagine it would only apply to smallish projects. ~~~ nance I did something like this before using dropbox with a few files. It took a long time to get comfortable with it, and it was just too much effort. This sounds better, but it looks like it's still a lot of work. ----- catmanjan ----- codermani i did a similar project using ----- raphaelj
