The true cost of treating HIV-positive patients has been estimated in the United States; however, the cost has not been estimated in other countries. The objective of this study was to estimate the true cost of treating HIV-positive patients in the United States. A Markov model was constructed to project the lifetime cost of treating HIV-positive patients in the United States from 2008 through 2017. The model incorporated US Department of Health and Human Services guidelines for starting antiretroviral therapy, clinical events and costs associated with adverse events. The model was used to project lifetime costs of antiretroviral therapy and was compared to the observed cost of starting therapy. In 2008, the cost of starting therapy was $14,766. As time progressed, the cost to start therapy increased to $21,247 in 2013. The total lifetime cost for a patient who initiated therapy in 2013 was $169,152. The cost to start therapy decreased from 2008 to 2013, but continued to increase from 2013 through 2017. This model showed that the cost of initiating therapy for a patient who is diagnosed with HIV has been decreasing since 2008. However, the total lifetime cost for a patient has continued to increase and will continue to increase until an effective vaccine or cure for HIV is available.Q: How do I make the text under the image on my website responsive? I'm creating a HTML/CSS site and I'd like the page to look different when it's viewed on a phone. I have a page where there is an image on the left, a paragraph of text, and a button on the right. This is the normal view when on desktop: And this is how it looks when viewed on a smartphone: I'm using Bootstrap. Why is the text under the image taking up so much space? A: That's because the image is using the full width, and the text is next to it. Try to move the paragraph inside the image like so: Text The present invention is directed to a novel optical communication 595f342e71
