Diagnostic value of carcinoembryonic antigen in the characterization of peritoneal carcinomatosis in appendiceal cancer and polypoid tumor-like growths. The aim of this study was to evaluate the possible role of serum carcinoembryonic antigen (CEA) assay in discriminating between peritoneal carcinomatosis (PC) and polypoid tumor-like growths (PLGs) in patients with appendiceal cancer. Thirty patients with appendiceal cancer and 10 patients with PLGs entered the study. Serum CEA levels were measured by radioimmunoassay before surgery, at the time of diagnosis and 1 month after initiation of therapy. All patients with PC had elevated CEA levels above the upper limit of normal (10 ng/ml) in contrast to the serum CEA levels in patients with PLGs. In the same patients the value of CEA before and after therapy was not significantly different and no positive correlation was observed between plasma and serum CEA levels. Our findings indicate that the assay of CEA in the serum has limited diagnostic value in distinguishing PC from PLGs and post therapy. However, it can be used as a sensitive marker for monitoring recurrence of PC.The first woman to allege disgraced movie producer Harvey Weinstein sexually assaulted her is now using her tremendous public moment to ask the world's media: Why does no one talk about her?
