Q: Protecting a 5V TO-220 from noise? I'm working on a project where there will be some 5V devices connected to a 3.3V bus (for a bit of convenience). The 5V devices can easily handle 3.3V, but we'd like to protect them from generating noise. In this case, I have something like this to protect: simulate this circuit - Schematic created using CircuitLab

The concern I have here is that this will only be an issue for short-duration spikes (so, as opposed to a battery that may get damaged even if only briefly). This seems very likely to me (though I'd like to be sure), but I just don't want to fry something after a couple of years like I did with my last project. Is this enough to protect my 5V device, or am I missing something?

A: Noise sensitive applications

The TO220 has ESD clamp diodes that provide extra protection. As you have suggested, the TO220 can handle spikes of up to about $2 \times 10^6 \text{ V/s}$. This is usually a fair amount of transient noise and it would definitely be safe. That said, noise sensitive applications (e.g. CCDs, Electron Discharge Sensors, etc.) may not be happy with such transient voltages. Good protection against the power-supply noise

Another way to provide some protection from spikes on the 5V line is with an RC snubber that limits the peak voltage to the 5V supply to about $12 \times 10^6 \text{ V/s}$. The decoupling capacitor should be at least $50 \mu\text{F}$. This may be a bit more desirable than the TO220 because the clamp diodes in TO220 will conduct for much longer than the RC snubber. Typical 5V line spike

The spike on the voltage line will represent $12 \times 10^6 \text{ V/s}$ at $3 \times 10^{-6} \text{ A}$. That's about 40

Adds Simple Songwriting Tools to iPhone/iPod Touch Creator of PRO band manager has made it simple to create custom keyboard based songwriting apps for iPhone. (ROCK HILL, SC, March 22, 2010) - MOTU Technology has enhanced the track recording capabilities of PRO tools album creator and PRO tools Band Manager software for iPhone and iPod touch devices with three in-app keyboard songwriting capabilities that keep users on their personal creative quests. The combined innate songwriting tools of Pro Tool Band Manager and Pro Tool Album creator extend each master music maker's creativity by bringing their song ideas to life with three separate keyboard songwriting experiences on iPhone and iPod touch devices. From the Pitch "We're excited to offer songwriters a simple way to create music on their iPhone or iPod touch," stated Blake Harris, co-founder and vice president of product development for MOTU Technology. "Simply start writing on a pro tool immediately moves these users into a creative zone, and then easily enter their complete song settings on Apple mobile devices with Pro Tool Anthem, Pro Tool BPM or Pro Tool Soundtrack." Guided Songwriting "We are looking at turning down the volume of guitar and drum tracks on an iPhone or iPod touch and turning up the volume of vocals by using these songwriting tools," Harris continued. "If user are not familiar with live loops or not interested in assigning loops, they can simply use our app as a built-in MIDI sequence sequencer. Simply open the song and enable the play mode, then load a sequence of your choice and, using one of the three separate, user-customized, keyboards within PRO tools album creator and PRO tools Band Manager apps, touch each key to sequentially lock down parts of a song. Drawing Boards "For experienced pro tools users that are looking to create MIDI songs, the draw step within our songwriting tools allows users to draw a track using some of the same features that pro tools users use on their computers or get a track started on the fly," Harris explained. "We're excited that our users can now combine two creative approaches to writing songs: in real-time on their mobile device and with the ability to import their PRO tools recordings into their songs." In addition to all songwriting capabilities, users can also quickly switch between song composing and song editing to make adjustments during live musical performance. "Now whether you're using the keyboard on your iPhone, listening to music or even mixing with GarageBand,
