The user interface may seem a bit crowded at a first glance, as you don't know where to get started. However, the help manual can give you an idea of how to create presentations for publishing them on the Internet. Powerbullet Presenter works with multiple pages and gives users the possibility to embed text messages, which can be customized in terms of font style, size, color, and alignment. Plus, you can specify the page size and pick a background color for the working environment. Another important feature worth mentioning gives you the possibility to insert images, geometrical objects (rectangle, oval), tables, bullet lists with various animations (e.g. rotate, tremble, horizontal sweep and text scroll), lines, as well as images from the Clipboard. Furthermore, you can configure the page transition, upload SWF or MP3 files, specify the page delay, record voice directly from your microphone, attach links, set the sound quality (low, medium, high), preview the project in HTML file format, undo your last action, and switch to a full screen mode. The generated project can be saved to a file, or printed. Plus, you can copy the selected information to the Clipboard. During our testing we have noticed that the program offers very good image quality and without errors throughout the entire process. It doesn't eat up CPU and memory, nor interfere with other applications' functionality. On the downside, even if you switch to a full screen mode, the working environment maintains the same small size, and it may get difficult to insert multiple text messages and images in a single page. All things considered, Powerbullet Presenter comes packed with useful features for helping you create Flash presentations, but it still needs some improvements in the GUI area to make the process more intuitive....
