Your decisions will determine the outcome of the war and who will become the ruler of Europe. Key Features: • Interactive story • Numerous historical figures • Two playable characters • English and German languages • Multiple difficulties • Hundreds of items, soldiers and weapons • Dynamic weather changes • New events every time • Advanced combat and tactical systems • The war is being played in 70 levels • Time manipulation • Choosing which of the two countries will be your player character • Dozens of letters from soldiers that have been saved Inspiration: The main idea for the game, was inspired by the German philosopher Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, who believed that humans found meaning and sense in history. In 2015-2016 I was also influenced by the movie WarGames (1983), based on the novel by John D. McDonald. The distant future on the planet Arda, history has come to an end. The ruling families have been wiped out and the world has plunged into a civil war. The struggle for power and resources has brought its own kind of death. Only two of the six remaining families still have the strength to take the last remaining habitable zone in the system. One of these two families claims to be descended from the very first Ardanod, their descendants have been fighting the same war since the beginning of time. The other party calls themselves the Spacers. They are descended from the original settlers of Arda in the first centuries of the 21st century. Their ancestors are living in bunkers to protect themselves from the war they call "World War Zero". One of the two factions recently discovered an ancient relic, as a chance to take power and control the historical storyline of Arda. This ancient artifact could change the fate of the whole system. Help a young girl trying to escape the fate and the darkness beyond, and uncover the truth behind the happenings. About the Developer: Luminous City Labs is a small independent team of game enthusiasts. The team got together and decided to create an original horror game. With the development of Serena we experienced the horror game genre for the first time. What influenced us to create this genre were genre classics like Silent Hill and Fatal Frame, but we also mixed it up with our own approach. This game is a real game about tragedy, and about heavy emotions. The team consists of four members: • Jonas Karpovas – Game developer • Povilas Pachnys – Game developer • Andrius Rusnys – Game developer • Andrius Bartukas – Game designer How did we build this game: The game was built using Unity3D. We developed the game in Unity3D. The game code was written in C# for the programming language. The artwork was made using Adobe Photoshop CS6 and Adobe Illustrator CS6. The soundtrack was made using SFZ Records. What about the voice acting: The voices of the characters were recorded with two actors. One actor was taken from Skype. The final sound for the game was recorded in the studio. The sound designer that did the sound was Sava Jovovic – sound designer. How can you help: At the moment the game is still in development. Serena Crack +

SEEN: Spoiler LOST: Spoiler Serena dies along the way on a quest to save her husband, but on her return home she is taken away by people who look like her dead friends. They then leave her and she wakes up to find herself in a cave, with nobody in sight. A man stands in front of her, wearing a mask and he tells Serena that she is lost. With no one around, and nowhere to go, Serena decides to keep on going until she finds her husband. Now, what follows is a surreal and disturbing nightmare, full of visual references to loss, dead friends, the unknown, and secret hideouts. The music is composed by John Debney, who has also composed for Halo 3, among other games. I like his music in this game, but I think his track 3, "Lost", and his track 9, "Rest", are the standout tracks. In my opinion, the latter track does a good job of reflecting the lost feeling that Serena is experiencing. (Note: the release of Halo 3 shortly after the release of Lost sparked a lot of talk and analysis of the two games. While it is true that there are many similarities between the two games, one of the most prominent being that both contain an ending for the main character, and both contain well composed music, I think that to be a fair comparison, they must be played separately, and that to truly compare the two games and give an objective analysis, they must be played together, in tandem. By the way, I actually think it is rather fascinating and amusing how many "like they're twins" stories there are circulating the internet comparing the two games.) Serena's voice actress, Laura Bailey, has done great work in this game, delivering a layered and very believable performance. She also has a distinct British accent in this game, giving her character a slightly comic but definitely noticeable quirk. The game shows quite a bit of originality. I really liked the player's ability to interact with the environment. I'm used to seeing the enemies pre-rendered and standing in front of you before you can interact with them, but the game does this on a regular basis. Serena, upon discovering a dead body, will try to touch it, and if she can't get a hold of it, she will lean over to reach it. This means that when you are approaching the body, you can hear it moving. Also

What's new:

Williams has had to fight multiple opponents over the past decade. From her first singles match in 2005, Williams has never played a single match as the same person. Serena Williams on Monday lost in the second round of the Australian Open, to a player ranked 15 in the world. But against which opponent did she have to fight the most to win? Here's a look back at the uneven story of Williams' career: 2005: Lost to "just a little girl from Port Arthur" In 2005, Williams begins her professional career as an 18-year-old outsider on the Australian tennis circuit. That initial loss — a tough battle on the Roland Garros clay courts against Kristina Barrois, a French 14th seed — was tough for Williams to get through. But the win was even more surprising. According to local media reports, "An Incredibly Tough Task" was how Tennis magazine described the match. It wasn't a great win, but Williams beat the tough Barrois, who had a career-high 52 unforced errors. Williams' rise was astounding, but few expected she could beat three different 14th-seeded players in a single month. By February, she'd reached a Grand Slam final in her second event — the Australian Open. Williams' quest to become the first unseeded player to reach a major final continued. That year, Williams won the three majors, reaching consecutive Grand Slam crowns at the U.S. Open, French Open and Wimbledon, becoming only the sixth left-hander to do so and the first player to win three straight slams in a single year. She was also the biggest favorite to win the Australian Open, then called the WTA Championships. That's because Williams had been ranked No. 1 in the world for 10 months. There's not an Australian Open since that hasn't been won by the world No. 1, yet Williams was unseeded. She was ranked No. 4. Her run ended in the final against Liu Fangzhou, an unseeded Chinese player ranked 262. But Williams lost in a grueling five-set semifinal to the eventual champion, Martina Hingis, in which both players were chasing their first major title. Despite the first major loss on the tour — it was a moment of realization for Williams that the long climb from 14
