Biosafety level 2 facilities are well-equipped and adequate for high-level recombinant DNA work, including a variety of microbial culture and transfection methods. Some research projects are performed with only minimal amounts of infectious organisms. More common is to use BSL-2 high-titered viruses for direct inoculation or high-titered viruses in BSL-2 medium or culture. BSL-2 contamination can be tracked carefully by molecular techniques such as colony-forming unit (CFU) counts for bacteria or plaque assays for viruses. Mice are in use as models of human diseases, although high-titered pathogens must be handled with care. The three major components of this instrumentation are as follows: i) an inverted microscope with a heated stage for fixed cells, ii) a customized sample stage for live cells, and iii) an incubator chamber for supplying gaseous or sterile fluids. A nitrogen-cooled microscope objective maintains the temperature of cells and tissues. Internal and external temperatures are 6d1f23a050
