A new twist is developing in China's "war on corruption" ahead of the October 19 Communist Party Congress. Hundreds of those who participated in the recent anti-corruption movement have been accused of "economic crimes" and many have been publicly targeted and arrested. Activists, lawyers, and rights groups claim that the central authorities are trying to quell the wave of public resentment by going after those who have organized and participated in anti-corruption demonstrations. The "economic crime" charges are significant because as soon as the anti-corruption campaign has cooled off, the authorities move to target those who have been accused of corruption. The charges against activists include illegal rally-keeping, with some facing unprecedented harsh sentences in the range of 15-20 years in prison. "Between October 25 to November 5, at least 3,500 people in 19 cities were put on trial for allegedly taking part in organized illegal rallies," wrote Zhang Xiaomei of China University of Political Science and Law. Earlier this month, in Hainan Province, Chen Wei, Li Gengsheng, and Li Weixian were charged with "illegal gathering." Li Weixian is the former deputy mayor of Haikou City and has been at

The purpose of this application is to request continued support for a predoctoral training program that will prepare students for research careers in the field of neuroscience. The comprehensive program will provide a strong foundation in neurobiology, learning to identify effective strategies for training the next generation of scientists. The proposed training program is divided into three areas of study: Neurobiology, Neuroscience and Behavioral Neuroscience. The goal of this interdisciplinary program is to provide a strong background in knowledge of the nervous system and to train the next generation of scientists. The program faculty are drawn from the departments of Neurobiology and Behavioral Sciences and the School of Medicine. The faculty include a graduate training program Director and a Neurobiology faculty Director. A major focus of the program is on the training of graduate students. Each student will complete coursework in Neurobiology, Neuroscience, and Behavioral Neuroscience as well as one seminar course, two research rotations and participation in the Neuroscience Pre-doctoral Colloquium. Students will be prepared to matriculate into a graduate program in either Neurobiology or Behavioral Neuroscience. Students who are admitted to this program will have completed at least 1 year of graduate level education. Students will receive mentored research in the labs of the training faculty. In addition, there will be a number of collaborative training activities available to the trainees in the laboratories of other training faculty. RELEVANCE: The fundamental processes of the nervous system are highly conserved, and the mechanisms of learning and memory involve very similar neuronal systems and processes
