when shy, artistic anna moves to the seaside to live with her aunt and uncle, she stumbles upon an old mansion surrounded by marshes, and the mysterious young girl, marnie, who lives there. the two girls instantly form a unique connection and friendship that blurs the lines between fantasy and reality. as the days go by, a nearly magnetic pull draws anna back to the marsh house again and again, and she begins to piece together the truth surrounding her strange new friend. based on the beloved young adult novel by joan g. robinson and directed by yonebayashi (the secret world of arrietty), the film is a haunting tale gorgeously rendered with its moonlit seascapes, glowing orchestral score, and powerful portrayals of friendship and belonging. awash with emotion, i strain to write this review. 'when marnie was there,' is honestly one of the most tender, endearing films i've ever seen. as hyperbolic as that may sound, let me assure you, no hyperbole is intended. the way this movie deals with grief, sorrow, depression, and anxiety is something of a miracle. the only other film that comes close to replicating the kind of inner turmoil that exists in a teenager's brain is pixar's 'inside out.' and even then, 'marnie' is much more realistic and possibly even more thoughtful. much like the two young girls in 'my neighbor totoro,' anna is confronted with a new place seemingly imbued with magical properties. there's a large mansion near the lake and anna is drawn to it for some unknown reason. she can't stop sketching it. it appears empty, until one night when lights are on and anna catches a glimpse of a striking blonde-haired girl named marnie (voiced by kiernan shipka). the two of them form a loving friendship that feels utterly genuine. except there's something mysterious about marnie and the house she's living in. the first two hours of the movie is very slow, but the growth of marnie is absolutely magnificent, and her relationship with anna is made real. anna is a little girl who is lonely and very lonely. we learn that she's been sent to live with her uncle and aunt after the death of her mother. she's told that she's dead, and that her real mother is an artist. anna's aunt is jealous of her, and anna is afraid to even tell anyone that she lives with her, because she's afraid her aunt will be jealous of her and hurt her. anna is a lonely child who wants to be a part of something, but she doesn't know what to do, and she's a little confused, and the story explores the struggle of finding a way to be a part of the world. she tries to be a part of her school's art club, but she's rejected, and then she tries to play with the children in the neighbourhood, but again, she's rejected. finally, she meets the beautiful marnie, and they form a friendship. it's a touching, and completely natural, friendship, and the early scenes with marnie are very sweet. but of course, as the story progresses, and anna becomes more confused and depressed, she becomes more and more obsessed with this young girl who lives in this house on the edge of the marsh. the film moves along very nicely at first, and marnie is a perfect foil for anna, who is lonely, and afraid to be hurt. as the story progresses, marnie begins to become more and more real to anna, and the two girls become very close. and of course, as anna gets closer to marnie, she starts to realise that marnie isn't real, but a figment of her
