People have taken part in Transgender Day of Remembrance for three years, to remember those who have been murdered because of their gender identity. So, why not 4th Transgender Day of Remembrance? I want the 4th Transgender Day of Remembrance to start here, in the UK. We have been commemorating the murders and other violent deaths of transgender people here, for the last three years. We lost three great friends and three amazing voices from this community in 2015. Aaron Jackson, 24, Phuong Tan Huynh, 27, and Brandon Teena, 22, all killed in their own right. The day has evolved over the years, and for 2017 we decided to rename it Trans Day of Remembrance. The name, however, remains confusing to some, because it has the word "remembrance" in the title, like the Remembrance Day we have in the UK. There are now two Transgender Days of Remembrance around the world, in California in November and in the US in April. I believe the UK has a part to play, in establishing national Transgender Day of Remembrance, and hosting a national event for transgender people every year on the last Friday of November. The day of remembrance is about more than just remembering the violence and suicide that this community experiences. It is about educating our government, police forces, local councils and media about the experiences of this community, and to raise awareness of the numbers of transgender people who are killed in the UK, more than in other countries. There have been 22 fatalities in the UK in 2015 - a 12 per cent increase on 2014. This is probably the lowest it has been in recent years. More people than ever are supporting transgender equality, and for that reason it is important to share their stories too. I am starting a Facebook group to promote the event. It is important that it be hosted here, to ensure that there is no confusion about what it is about. f988f36e3a
