Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a device and method for testing the electrical characteristics of semiconductor devices. 2. Background Art Testing of the electrical characteristics of semiconductor devices can be accomplished using a storage tester or a probe card. The storage tester, typically, comprises a testing apparatus that is connected to a testing station at which a semiconductor device to be tested is connected to the testing apparatus. The testing apparatus includes a testing head comprising a plurality of contactors, each contactor being coupled to a respective contactor socket in the testing apparatus. When a device under test (DUT) is connected to a contactor socket, the contactor connected to the contactor socket is electrically connected to the DUT. When the DUT is being tested, the testing apparatus repeatedly sends a test signal to the DUT through the contactor. If the DUT has a defect, the test signal is reflected by the DUT so as to disturb the DUT. A microcomputer in the testing apparatus measures and analyzes the test signal and the electrical characteristics of the DUT. The probe card comprises a probe card head at which a plurality of contactors are mounted. When the DUT is being tested, a testing apparatus is connected to the probe card head. The testing apparatus sends a test signal to the DUT through the contactors. The above-described testing apparatus employs a contactor. The contactor comprises a plurality of contacts connected to the testing apparatus. The contactor contacts are moved into and out of contact with the DUT in a push-pull action. The testing apparatus for the storage tester or probe card has the advantage of requiring only a small number of components. However, if a contactor is not used, then the testing apparatus requires a larger number of components. The
